

CHAPTER III

METHODOLOGY

This chapter presents methodology such as; research design of the study, settings, participants of the study, technique of data collection, and also followed by technique of data analysis.

3.1 Research Design

Since the purpose of this study is to explore the challenges of problems that Thai EFL pre-service teachers faced during their filed teaching practice at some schools in Kendari, South East Sulawesi, Indonesia. The context of the classroom they faced, therefore, is Indonesian students learning English with most possibility using English and Indonesian as the classroom's instruction, the methodology focuses on the existential experiences of the teachers themselves, that is, their perceptions, language, actions, thoughts, and feelings about their experiences during the practicum. Thus, the methods used to collect and analyze the data in this study are those based on the principles of qualitative field studies (Bogdan & Biklin, 1992; Glaser & Strauss, 1967; Goetz & LeCompte, 1981; Peacock, 2001; Spradley, 1979; Spradley & McCurdy, 1972).

A qualitative study was concluded in this study. In addition, according to Walliman (2011) "Qualitative methods are used to find information on people's actions and holdings by asking them to give their own interpretation, or account, of what they experience.” Accounts can consist of a variety of data sources; people have spoken explanations, behavior (such as gestures), personal records of experiences and conversations.

3.2 Setting and Context

This study conducted at IAIN Kendari with the focus on some Thai students majoring in EFL who have experienced real English teaching in some schools in Kendari city, South East Sulawesi, Indonesia. The assigned schools for the Thai pre-service teachers are SMAN 9 Kendari, MTsN 1 Kendari, MTsN 1 Konda, MTsN 2 Kendari, and SMKN 2 Kendari with the Thai students were 5 people (2 males and 3 females). The English department received the international student's program who are from Thailand since in 2017.

3.3 Participant of the Study

The participants in this research as the students who are from the faculty of education, English department. All participants are 3rd-year students who are studying at the Islamic State Institute of Kendari, Faculty of Education, English Department. The participants were enrolled in being a pre-service teacher, the course as part of their graduation requirement.

3.4 Technique of Data Collection

Collecting data in one language and presenting the findings in another is increasingly common among social researchers and may present challenges for analysis (Birbili, 2000; Makofane & Shirindi, 2018; Smith, Chen & Liu, 2008).

To get the data about what are the problems encountered by Thai EFL students while doing field teaching practice in Indonesian classroom context. In this study, the researcher used the reflective journal. The researcher created at least five questions and then gives to Thai EFL to answer the questions.

The researcher created at least five questions as the reflection test related to the title of the research. The researcher used the Thai language of reflection. Why we used the L1 in the reflection because we need to get the data. Then, the researcher explained how to answer the question. Then, the researcher gave to the Thai EFL to answer the questions about what are the problems encountered by Thai EFL students while teaching English in the Indonesian classroom context. After that, the researcher sent the reflective journal passed on the What's app application. Then, they submitted the results again passed on what's app application.

3.5 Instrumentation

This proposed study used reflective journal and semi-structured interview to collect the data that could answer the question from the research question.

3.5.1 Reflective Journal

The first instrument is reflective journal; the researcher will give some reflection tests to the Thai EFL. The Thai EFL will answer the question. The use of reflective journal is to know the Thai EFL' responses about pre service teacheras what the problems encountered by Thai EFL students while doing field teaching practice in Indonesian classroom context are. According to Hatton and Smith, the essential quality of reflection is thinking about practice in order to improve (Ward & McCotter, 2004).

3.5.2 Semi-structured Interview

The second instrument is semi-structured interview (Merton, 1956). Semi-structured-interviews give the group control over the direction of the interview, especially in exploratory research like this; moreover, it gives the data a multi-dimensional nature which enriches the data (Hourani, 2013; Morgan, 1997). In semi-structured interview, the researcher will interview Thai EFL students to get the responses about what the problems encountered by Thai EFL students while doing field teaching practice in Indonesian classroom context are. Semi-structured interviews are superbly suited for a number of value-able tasks, particularly when more than a few of the open-ended questions require follow-up queries.

3.6 Technique of Data Analysis

Wiersma (1991) stated “Data analysis in qualitative research is a process of categorization, description, and synthesis. Data reduction is necessary for the description and interpretation of the phenomenon under study”. In short, data analysis is systematically process to analyze data which have been collected.

In analyzing the data, the researcher used several steps such as; collecting data, preparing the data for analysis, coding the data and description to be used in the research paper.

Only one step was students' reflection. The researcher collected Thai EFL students' reflection to analyze Thai EFL students' reflection by checking the result of Thai EFL students. After getting the results, the researcher moved to Ms. Excel and determining the category of how of what are the problems encountered by Thai EFL students while doing field teaching practice the n the Indonesian classroom context, and the researcher calculated Thai EFL students' response. After calculating Thai EFL students' answers, the researcher perpetuated the data in this research.
