We ask authors to create abstracts that provide readers with a clear overview of the paper. This gives authors direction while they revise the remainder of their manuscript and aids in helping them arrange their thoughts. Please compose your abstract in 200 words or fewer to demonstrate how the paper is structured in a logical and precise manner. Putting your abstract into a five-sentence essay is one method to accomplish this:

You should describe the issue, the subject of your research, or the gap you hope to address in the first sentence. The research topic or hypothesis for your study will be discussed in the second sentence. You will discuss the subjects and methodology of your study in the third sentence. The fourth sentence should discuss the findings of your investigation. The key points of your discussion of the findings will be covered in the fifth sentence.

Your introduction follows these guidelines: Introduction (No more than 4 to 5 paragraphs)

(1) What is crucial about the ISU (phenomenon) that needs to be written about (needs to be published): quantitative or qualitative (or both). (2) Is the (existing) writing not enough? Explain: what others have ALREADY written and what has NOT been written (hence the need for this paper). (Previous research) (Novelty). (3) What is the (specific) purpose of the paper? (is it different from others? The purpose of this paper is to COMPLETE the shortcomings of the existing paper)=> focus of the paper. (4) What do you want to test (prove) in this paper? (argument or hypothesis that you want to test) The most important introduction is to show the position of your research by pointing to previous studies.

In the results section, to show that this is qualitative field research, it is necessary to show evidence of interviews and documentary evidence. Take a look at some of these articles to replicate

<https://pasca.jurnalikhac.ac.id/index.php/tijie/article/view/261/175>

The conclusion contains the following important points:

1. The most important finding of the research (something surprising, shocking): something that was ONLY known after the research was conducted.
2. Limitations of the research: limited sample, limited cases (only 3 cases), limited variation (not seen at different levels), limited locations, limited gender/age, limited methods (so that further research is needed that accommodates ... more varied cases ... larger samples ... for a deeper and more comprehensive understanding. With more in-depth and comprehensive results, more appropriate policies can be formulated.

Make this title unlike any other thesis in Indonesia. You can find inspiration in some reputable journals (Tanfondline, Science Direct, and so on).

We ask authors to create abstracts that provide readers with a clear paper overview. This gives authors direction while they revise the remainder of their manuscript and aids in helping them arrange their thoughts. Please compose your abstract in 200 words or fewer to demonstrate how the paper is structured in a logical and precise manner. Putting your abstract into a five-sentence essay is one method to accomplish this:

The research topic or hypothesis for your study will be discussed in the second sentence. You will discuss the subjects and methodology of your study in the third sentence. The fourth sentence should discuss the findings of your investigation. The key points of your discussion of the findings will be covered in the fifth sentence.

Keywords consist of 3 words to five words. They contain words from relevant concepts or theories.

Your introduction follows these guidelines: Introduction (No more than 4 to 5 paragraphs)

- (1) What is crucial about the ISU (phenomenon) that needs to be written about (needs to be published): quantitative or qualitative (or both).
 - (2) Is the (existing) writing not enough? Explain what others have ALREADY written and what has NOT been written (hence the need for this paper). (Previous research) (Novelty).
 - (3) What is the (specific) purpose of the paper? (is it different from others? The purpose of this paper is to COMPLETE the shortcomings of the existing paper)=> focus of the paper.
 - (4) What do you want to test (prove) in this paper? (argument or hypothesis that you want to test)
- The most important introduction is to show the position of your research by pointing to previous studies.

Your discussion is the most anticipated part of the journal because you will discuss and elaborate on previous research and theory so that your research has implications and recommendations for future research.

The conclusion contains the following important points:

1. The most important finding of the research (something surprising, shocking): something that was ONLY known after the research was conducted.
2. Limitations of the research: limited sample, limited cases (only 3 cases), limited variation (not seen at different levels), limited locations, limited gender/age, limited methods (so that further research is needed that accommodates ... more varied cases ... larger samples ... for a deeper and more comprehensive understanding. With more in-depth and comprehensive results, more appropriate policies can be formulated.
